Our internal “conversation” is broken, muddled by lies and half-truths.

A child argues it's okay to hit his brother because, “He started it.” The guy in the sitcom stuffing his pockets with sugar packets argues that the restaurant “wants” him to take them all (cue the laugh track). I used to tell myself the boss didn't mind if I come back late from lunch. I still tell myself I can drive excessively fast on the highway because “everyone else does it.” I justify my impatience, saying I'm tired. I justify my tiredness as over-work when, in fact, it's because I stayed up late watching television. I pretend the bad things I do are okay and that the good things I do are heroic.

If I were to be given a crayon and instructed to draw a picture of my soul, the result would be a mess of inaccuracies and photo-shopped idealizations. I know for a fact that even my writing, the essays, homilies, and books I pour my heart into in an attempt to be transparent and make authentic connections with readers, even these are marred by self-justifying distortions.

Self-justification is a form of lying. It's like a funhouse mirror that reflects back a completely different image. The great saints recognized the problem. St. Paul wondered why he did things he didn't want to do and, yet, did not do the things he did want to do. St. Augustine likened it to floating outside himself, unable to accurately diagnose the motivations of his own heart. When everything is layered in self-justification, we become mysteries impossible to solve.

It's a form of lying to myself. A lie I barely even admit exists. I explain it away into oblivion. I forget I'm lying and really begin believing the false assumptions. I feel better about myself, but have completely lost touch with who I really am. This is the cost of the lies.

In the midst of a self-justification spree, my memories and self-assessments become unreliable. I no longer have the ability to improve or change because I cannot accurately name my flaws to begin with. Instead of honesty, I want to save face and avoid embarrassment.

everyone who wants to stop justifying their actions and make a better confession is to first ask the Holy Spirit for accurate self-knowledge. God can help us cut through our self-justifications and finally get honest. practice naming those actions objectively and clearly, not couching them in self-justifications about how they were caused by stress or reactions to someone else or from experiencing a bad day. Once we uncover the reality of our sins, it's time to take responsibility.

February 1, 2026 Fourth Sunday In Ordinary Time

The phrase “poor in spirit” can be confusing. Think of it in this sense – poor in spirit means depending on God’s providence and not depending on our own self-reliance. Being detached from earthly things (power, money, and comfort) and being attached to heavenly things (charity, sacrifice, and mercy). Denying ourselves from satisfying our desires and helping others obtain their basic needs.
